

STI

To STING. v. a. Preterite, I stung, participle passive stung, and stung. [Irish, Saxon; stungen, fore pricked, Icelandic.]

1. To pierce or wound with a point darted out, as that of wasps or scorpions.

The snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shakespeare.
That snakes and vipers sting and transmit their mischief by the tail is not easily to be justified, the poison lying about the teeth and communicated by the bite. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To pain acutely.
- His unkindness
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear right,
To his doghearted daughters: these things sting him
So venomously, that burning flame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare.

No more I wave
To prove the hero.—Slander stings the brave. Pope.
STING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp point with which some animals are armed, and which is commonly venomous.

Serpents have venomous teeth, which are mistaken for their sting. Bacon's Natural History.

His rapier was a hornet's sting,
It was a very dangerous thing;
For if he chanc'd to hurt the king,
It would be long in healing. Drayton.

2. Any thing that gives pain.
- The Jews receiving this book originally with such sting in it, shews that the authority was high. Forster.

3. The point in the last verse.

It is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis. Dryden.
STINGILY. adv. [from stingy.] Covetously.

STINGINESS. n. f. [from stingy.] Avarice; covetousness; niggardiness.

STINGLESS. adj. [from sting.] Having no sting.

He hugs this viper when he thinks it stingless. Decay of Picty.

STINGO. n. f. [from the sharpness of the taste.] Old beer. A cant word.

STINGY. adj. [A low cant word. In this word, with its derivative, the g is pronounced as in gem.] Covetous; niggardly; avaricious.

A stingy narrow hearted fellow that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten.

He relates it only by parcels, and wont give us the whole, which forces me to bespeak his friends to engage him to lay aside that stingy humour, and gratify the publick at once.

Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.
To STINK. v. n. Preterite I stunk, participle stunk, and stunk. [Irish, Saxon; stinken, Dutch.] To emit an offensive smell, commonly a smell of putrefaction.

John, it will be stinking law for his breath. Shakespeare.

When the children of Ammon saw that they stunk before David, they sent and hired Syrians. 2 Sam. x. 6.

What a fool art thou, to leave thy mother for a nasty stink- ing goat? L'Estrange.

Most of smells want names; sweet and stinking serve our turn for these ideas, which is little more than to call them pleasing and displeasing. Locke.

Chloris, this costly way to stink give o'er,
'Tis throwing sweet into a common shore;
Not all Arabia would sufficient be,
Thou smell'st not of thy sweets, they stink of thee. Granv.

STINK. n. f. [from the verb.] Offensive smell.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not most pernicious, but such airs as have some similitude with man's body, and so betray the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

They share a sin; and such proportions fall,
That, like a stink, 'tis nothing to them all. Dryden.

By what criterion do ye eat, d'ye think?
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink. Pope.

STINKARD. n. f. [from stink.] A mean stinking paltry fellow.

STINKER. n. f. [from stink.] Something intended to offend by the smell.

The air may be purified by burning of stinkpots or stinkers in contagious lanes. Harvey.

STINKINGLY. adv. [from stinking.] With a stink.

Can't thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Shakespeare.

STINKPOT. n. f. [from stink and pot.] An artificial composition offensive to the smell.

The air may be purified by fires of pitch-barrels, especially in close places, by burning of stinkpots. Harvey.

To STINT. v. a. [Irish, Saxon; stunta, Icelandic.] To bound;
to limit; to confine; to restrain; to stop.

The reason hereof is the end which he hath proposed, and the law whereby his wisdom hath stinted the effects of his power in such sort, that it doth not work infinitely, but consequently unto that end for which it worketh. Hobbes.

STI

Then hopeless, heartless, 'gan the cunning thief,
Persuade us die, to stint all further strife. Forster.

Nature wisely stints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturb'd delight. Dryden.

I shall not go about to extenuate the latitude of the curse upon the earth, or stint it only to the production of weeds, but give it its full scope in an universal diminution of the fruitfulness of the earth. Woodward.

A supposed heathen deity might be so poor in his attributes, so stinted in his knowledge, that a Pagan might hope to conceal his perjury from his notice. Adelphi.

Few countries, which, if well cultivated, would not support double their inhabitants, and yet fewer where one third are not extremely stinted in necessities. Swift.

STINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Limit; bound; restraint.

We must come at the length to some pause: for if every thing were to be desired for some other without any stint, there could be no certain end proposed unto our actions, we should go on we know not whither. Hobbes.

Touching the stint or measure thereof, rites and ceremonies, and other external things of the like nature being hurtful unto the church, either in respect of their quality, or in regard of their number; in the former there could be no doubt or difficulty what would be done; their deliberation in the latter was more difficult. Hobbes.

The extenuations of mourning, a decent funeral, and black habits are the usual stints of common husbands. Dryden.

2. A proportion; a quantity assigned.

Our stint of woe
Is common; every day, a sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant
Have just our theme of woe. Shakespeare.

He that gave the hint,
This letter for to print,
Must also pay the stint. Denham.

How much wine drink you in a day? my stint in company is a pint at noon. Swift.

STIPEND. n. f. [from stipendium, Latin.] Wages; settled pay.

All the earth,
Her kings and tetrarchs are their tributaries;
People and nations pay them hourly stipends. Ben. Johnson.

St. Paul's zeal was expressed in preaching without any offerings or stipend. Taylor.

STIPENDIARY. adj. [from stipendarius, Latin.] Receiving salaries; performing any service for a stated price.

His great stipendiary prelates came with troops of evil appointed horsemen not half full. Knolly's Hist. of the Turks.

Place rectories in the remaining churches, which are now served only by stipendiary curates. Swift.

STIPENDIARY. n. f. [from stipendarius, Latin.] One who performs any service for a settled payment.

This whole country is called the kingdom of Tunis; the king whereof is a kind of stipendiary unto the Turk. Abbot.

STIPTICK. adj. [from stiptikos.] Having the power to staunch STIPTICAL. adj. [from stiptikos.] This by analogy should be written stiptick.

There is a fowr stiptick salt diffused through the earth, which passing a concoction in plants, becometh milder. Brown.

From spirit of salt carefully dephlegmed and removed into lower glasses, having gently abstracted the whole, there remained in the bottom, and the neck of the retort, a great quantity of a certain dry and stiptical substance, mostly of a yellowish colour. Boyle.

In an effusion of blood, having doffs ready dip't in the royal stiptick, we applied them. Wise's Surgery.

To STIPULATE. v. n. [from stipular, Latin; stipular, Fr.] To contract; to bargain; to settle terms.

The Romans very much neglected their maritime affairs;
for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbutnot.

STIPULATION. n. f. [from stipulation, Fr. from stipular.] Bargains;
We promise obediently to keep all God's commandments; the hopes given by the gospel depend on our performance of that stipulation. Rogers's Sermons.

To STIR. v. a. [Irish, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.]

1. To move; to remove from its place.

My foot I had never yet in five days been able to stir but as it was lifted. Temple.

Other spirits
Shoot through their tracts, and distant muscles fill:
This foreign, by his arbitrary nod,
Refrains or sends his ministers abroad;
Swift and obedient to his high command
They stir a finger, or they lift a hand. Blackmore.

2. To agitate; to bring into debate.

Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence than voice it with claims. Bacon.

STI

One judgment in parliament, that cases of that nature ought to be determined according to the common law, is of greater weight than many cases to the contrary, wherein the question was not stirred; yea, even though it should be stirred and the contrary affirmed. Hale.

3. To incite; to instigate; to animate.

With him is come the mother queen;
An Atë stirring him to blood and strife. Shakespeare.

If you stir these daughters hearts Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The soldiers love her brother's memory;
And for her sake some mutiny will stir. Dryden.

4. To stir up. To incite; to animate; to instigate.

This would seem a dangerous commission, and ready to stir up all the Irish in rebellion. Spenser's Ireland.

The greedy thirst of royal crown,
That knows no kindred, no regards, no right,
Stirred Porrex up to put his brother down. Spenser.

God stirred him up another adversary. 1 Kings xi. 23.

The words of Judas were very good, and able to stir them up to valour. 2 Maccab. xiv. 17.

Having overcome and thrust him out of his kingdom, he stirred up the Christians and Numidians against him. Knollys.

The vigorous spirit of Montrose stirred him up to make some attempt whether he had any help or no. Clarendon.

The improving of his own parts and happiness stir him up to a notable design. Morley's Anecdotes.

To stir up vigour in him, employ him in some constant bodily labour. Locke.

Thou with rebel insolence did'st dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

The use of the passions is to stir it up, and put it upon action, to awake the understanding and to enforce the will. Addison.

5. To stir up. To put in action.

Hell is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stir- reth up the dead for thee. Isa. xiv. 9.

Such mirth the jocund flood or gamesome pipe
stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds. Milton.

To STIR. v. n.

1. To move one's self; to go out of the place; to change place.

No power he had to stir nor will to rise. Fairy Queen.

They had the semblance of great bodies behind on the other side of the hill, the falsehood of which would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were therefore not to stir. Clarendon.

2. To be in motion; not to be still; to pass from inactivity to motion.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from these weak stirrings and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit.

3. To become the object of notice.

If they happen to have any superior character, they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon every thing that stirs or appears. Watts.

4. To rise in the morning. This is a colloquial and familiar use.

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stir- ring, tell her, there's one Calisto entreats of her a little favour of speech. Shakespeare's Othello.

STIR. n. f. [Irish, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.]

1. Tumult; bustle.

What hallooing and what stir is this to-day?

These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase. Shakespeare.

He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir for such a necessity as no man ever denied. Bp. Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, miserable sir,
Why all these words, this clamour and this stir,
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day? Denham.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir. South's Sermons.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours. Glanville.

After all this stir about them they are good for nothing. Til- lisonder, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settled definitions of. Locke.

2. Commotion; public disturbance; tumultuous disorder; seditious uproar.

Whensoever the earl shall die, all those lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a foul stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through supplantation of some others who lie in the wind. Spenser's Ireland.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts. Abbot.

STI

Being advertised of some stirs raised by his unnatural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without striking a blow. Davies.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth,
Satan from hell 'scap'd through the darksome gulf
Hath rais'd in paradise, and how disturb'd
This night the human pair. Milton.

3. Agitation; conflicting passion.

He did keep
The deck, with glove or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the stirs and fits of 's mind
Could best express how flow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

STIRIOUS. adj. [from stiria, Latin.] Resembling icicles.

Chrystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or fillicious dependencies of ice. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

STIRP. n. f. [from stirps, Latin.] Race; family; generation. Not used.

Sundry nations got footing in that land, of the which there yet remain divers great families and stirps. Spenser.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than when there are stirps of nobles. Bacon.

All nations of might and fame resorted hither; of whom we have some stirps and little tribes with us at this day. Bacon.

STIRRER. n. f. [from stir.]

1. One who is in motion; one who puts in motion.

2. A riler in the morning.

Come on; give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer. Shak.

3. An inciter; an instigator.

4. STIRRER up. An inciter; an instigator.

A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stirrer up of nature in a perpetual activity. Kaleigh.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Nic, to turn barterer in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

STIRRUP. n. f. [Irish, Saxon; stirap, from stiran, Saxon, to climb, and nap, a cord.] An iron hoop suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirrups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way; and therefore the stirrup was called so in scorn, as it were a stay to get up, being derived of the old English word stir; which is to get up, or mount. Spenser.

Hast thou not kiss'd my hand, and held my stirrup? Shak.

His horse hipp'd with an old mothy saddle, the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Between the stirrup and the ground,
Mercy I ask'd, mercy I found. Camden's Remains.

At this the knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup, Cry'd out Victoria. Hudibras.

To STITCH. v. a. [from sticke, Danish; sticken, Dutch.]

1. To sew, to work on with a needle.

2. To join; to unite, generally with some degree of clumsiness or inaccuracy.

Having stitched together these animadversions touching architecture and their ornaments, contemplative spirits are as restless as active. Watson.

3. To stitch up. To mend what was rent.

It is in your hand as well to stitch up his life again, as it was before to rent it. Sidney.

I with a needle, and thread stitch'd up the artery and the wound. Wise's Surgery.

To STITCH. v. n. To practise needlework.

STITCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pass of the needle and thread through any thing.

2. [From sticke, Saxon.] A sharp lancing pain.

If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourself into stitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very re-negado. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

A simple bloody sputation of the lungs is differenced from a pleurisy, which is ever painful, and attended with a stitch.
Harvey on Consumption.

3. In Chapman it seems to mean furrows or ridges, and perhaps has the same meaning in the following passage of Dryden, which otherwise I do not understand.

Many men at plow he made, and drave earth here and there,
And turn'd up stitches orderly. Chapman's Iliad.

A stitch-fall'n cheek, that hangs below the jaw,
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw,
For an old grandam ape. Dryden.

STITCHERY. n. f. [from stitch.] Needlework. In contempt.

Come lay aside your stitchery; play the idle housewife with me this afternoon. Shakespeare's Othello.

STITCHWORT. n. f. Camomile.

STITHY. n. f. [from stithie, Icelandic; stith, hard, Saxon.]

1. An anvil; the iron body on which the smith forges his work.